WE'RE OPEN
VIC PARK

Mayor's Message

Vic Park is 'loved, local and alive'.

That's what our community told us during consultation for the development of the Town of Victoria Park's first Events Strategy, and we loved it! This has become the vision for this Strategy, which will help guide the design, planning and delivery of community events for the next four years.

Events are integral to the heart and culture of our Town and this strategy will help us celebrate our community connections, add vibrancy, and cultivate a dynamic place for everyone.

Community engagement was key to the development of this strategy. Through workshops and consultations, we sought to understand what was important to local residents, businesses and key community organisations. The feedback we received highlighted both a need and an opportunity to use events to build a strong sense of community, foster wellbeing and inclusivity, and to contribute to the local economy. We can achieve the community's social and economic priorities in our Strategic Community Plan through a strategic approach to our events program.

Turning the vision of this strategy into reality means events that have a distinctly local identity and harness the talents of our local community. We will design and support events that are diverse, inclusive and accessible; that ignite and celebrate creativity; support local, and champion sustainability. Importantly, we will seek to partner with others and attract events that contribute to making our Town a vibrant destination for visitors.

The strategy is complemented by an Annual Events Plan outlining the specific events and activations to be delivered or supported by the Town in a year. I encourage you to refer to the Annual Events Plan to help plan your activities – I'm sure you'll find reasons to attend events time and again.

I hope you enjoy reading this strategy as much as we enjoyed collaborating on it with you. I look forward to seeing you at an event soon.

Mayor Karen Vernon

- Events should be inclusive and accessible and offer something for everyone.

The Town's role in the delivery of events

The Town of Victoria Park currently undertakes a range of roles in events and festivals as outlined below:

Event Organiser/Producer

The Town delivers and is fully responsible for the event.

Delivery may be wholly organised in-house; outsourced to a contracted event manager or a combination of in-house leadership and delivery with contractors. Can also be produced through a partnership arrangement.

Partner/Supporter

The Town provides a financial contribution and/or in-kind support for an external organisation.

We provide in-kind and financial support for events organised by others through targeted funding programs, as well as partnering with other agencies to co-deliver/contribute to external opportunities.

Approver/Host

The Town assists the creation, attraction or presentation and approval of events but without providing material assistance.

We coordinate the event approvals process for events in the Town ensuring events are safe, fun, and able to meet community needs. As well as ensuring regulatory requirements are met, we empower and develop event organisers through skills development and the sharing of information and advice.

Advocate

The Town will strongly advocate for events and activities.

We are a champion and advocate for events so they may deliver positive outcomes to community and catalyse partnership opportunities.

Communicator/Promoter

Background information

Strategy Development

Research and information gathering

The Events Strategy has been developed on a sound evidence base with targeted consultation and engagement.

Key steps in developing the strategy have included:

- Review of the national and international literature
- Benchmarking with other Local Governments
- Conducting an online community survey – Your Thoughts
- Consultations with key stakeholders both internal and external to Council
- Analysis of the Town's current events portfolio
- Review of the Town's strategic plans, strategies, and policy documents relevant to the development of the Events Strategy

The outcomes of all this research and information gathering have been used to underpin the Events Strategy.

Consultation and engagement

Talking to the community to understand what they value, how they see themselves and what priorities they have was an essential part of the process to develop the Events Strategy.

Discussions with businesses, community organisations and community members, and event/industry specialists have informed the contents and focus of the strategy.

Our conversations were open and diverse, but also included the following areas of focus:

- Places and spaces and resources
- Issues and challenges
- Activities, programs, and events.

The feedback and ideas provided reflected the diversity of our community and has helped to shape the vision, goals, strategies, and actions contained in this document.

Engagement included:

- Pop-up engagement activations at local events and facilities
- In-depth workshops with community groups, residents, and Town staff
- Online surveys to community and Elected Members
- Concept Forums with Elected Members
- Engagement with the Town's Access and Inclusion Advisory Group
- Engagement with the Town's Mindeera Advisory Group.

Strategic alignment:

The following Town of Vic Park strategies, plans and documents were reviewed to inform the development of the Events Strategy:

- Strategic Community Plan 2017–2032
- Corporate Business Plan 2017–2022
- Vic Vision Engagement Outcomes
- Vic Vision Future Trends Paper
- Community Benefits Strategy 2019–2024
- Economic Development Strategy 2018–2023
- Public Open Space Strategy
- Place Plans
- Social Infrastructure Plan
- Youth Action Plan 2021–2024
- Reconciliation Action Plan 2018–2020
- Arts and Culture Plan
- Policy 226 Recreational reserve hire
- Policy 261 Sustainable events
- Policy 405 Events on parks and reserves – notification to residents
- Other Event Strategies – local, regional, and national

Other Events Strategies

Upon review of events strategies from various local governments, the following themes emerged:

- Widespread acknowledgement of the positive role/value events play in social, cultural and economic contexts
- Lack of year-round vibrancy is cited as a common issue
- Increasing issues with competition from other entertainment options (e.g., at home streaming/food delivery, sports, gaming, adjacent local government areas etc.)
- The need for a proactive rather than reactive approach

Common key objectives

- Increase visitation, length of stay and economic benefit for the region
- Attracting events
- Community health and wellbeing
- Supporting event organisers to deliver better market-led results

Current Trends

The trends listed below were relevant at the time of the strategy development.

Sustainability

Aware of how human activity has impacted our planet and climate, we have growing expectations of ourselves, collectively and individually, in how we address this toll. A rising number of consumers, particularly among younger demographics, are demanding genuine action in relation to sustainable consumerism.

The Victoria Park community is no different. In feedback, residents have indicated that while they love gatherings and events, they want sustainability to be a key consideration for event designers and organisers. As far as Victoria Park's people are concerned, events that also address carbon footprint, minimise single-use plastics and the impact on local environment are all key considerations for the Town of Victoria Park (the Town) and event organisers in fulfilling corporate—and community—responsibility expectations.

COVID-19 disruptions

Since 2020, the pandemic has disrupted lifestyles, livelihoods and industries, and caused the cancellation of countless events. And while we are learning to live with COVID, this disruption is not yet over. Supply-chain issues, travel restrictions, changing health requirements, and reduced capacities due to social distancing are ongoing challenges that continue to create uncertainty for the events market.

Despite, and maybe because of, these challenges, Victoria Park's community is 100% behind events that reunite people and families, boost local businesses, and build a sense of confidence and solidarity as everyone emerges from pandemic conditions. Community is not only calling for the large, annual, 'headline' gatherings, which attract numbers from beyond Victoria Park, but are also keen to see more 'neighbourhood-level' events that speak directly to local residents and businesses and reflect the multicultural identities across various districts. It's important also that these events are universally inclusive and accessible.

Hybrid work models

2021 was a year of experimentation with many organisations implementing hybrid work experiences and models. Some organisations are now choosing to continue these hybrid models, resulting in a different geographical spread of population, and changed commuting habits.

For example, working from home patterns might mean an increased and more varied demographic calling on neighbourhood amenities and accessing services during weekdays or unusual hours. Being closer to home, these people might want to participate in community life in different ways, maybe offer some time and talent for the greater good. This new mix of energy could offer the Town a key opportunity identified in community feedback: to be proactive and leverage new and exciting opportunities in the Town.

Increased competition

Compared to a decade ago, there is a plethora of convenient entertainment options now available in people's homes. Access to food delivery services, content streaming services, and virtual performances are almost second nature for many now, increasing the pressure on real-time, live events to innovate and perform to higher standards. And this competition can only be a good thing. It's evident that, especially with the COVID-induced social isolation challenges and their aftermath, there truly is no substitute to that 'being there in person' experience. Consequently, event quality is ever more important.

Perhaps this is why Victoria Park people are asking for more arts and culture, indicating a healthy appetite for an increase in live happenings and events. They've also given the Summer Street Party a ringing endorsement as an annual asset to the Town that should be retained and grown, year-on-year. It's a sign that even with the ease of online and dial-in entertainment, we only truly thrive and connect in the real world.

Experiences over products

An evolution in customer expectations is taking place, with Millennials and Gen Z valuing participatory experiences over material possessions. People are calling for better and deeper engagement, and an increasingly important factor in event design is considering how to address personal relevance for audience segments: the 'what does this mean for me' element.

Accordingly, events that offer individual points of contact with collective, immersive, sensory experiences are now in high demand, and this demand is only expected to increase post-COVID.

With their feedback, Victoria Park's people have given the Town a golden opportunity to make the most of this 'event expectation evolution.' By demanding more events that speak to residents, businesses and diverse cultures, asking for more arts and culture, and encouraging the Town to be proactive with new and exciting opportunities, Victoria Park is showing it is open and ready to engage with innovative strategies and interventions in the events realm.

Culture is king

In 2017–18 (before COVID, in other words), over 82% of Australians attended at least one cultural venue or event. Incredibly, the COVID lockdowns in 2020 and 2021 did not adversely impact this appetite for arts and culture. On the contrary, Australians accessed virtual content and streaming services in place of live experiences at record levels. It's clear that as a nation (and this trend has also been observed in other countries), we love and need culture.

So, when the people of Victoria Park say—as they are—that they want more arts and culture, and more events celebrating local distinctiveness and diversity, they are also articulating the blueprint for the intangible things they consider essential to quality of life in Victoria Park. They're saying what Victoria Park can give to them. Entertainment, enjoyment, dialogue, discovery, exchange. The opportunity to get together, debate, reflect, celebrate, collaborate, connect. And the gateway to all of this is culture.
